2010

Huawei Technology Co. Ltd acquired M4S NV (Multi Mode Multi Media Solutions NV) a subsidiary of Option NV (Euronext: OPTI; OTC: OPNVY) for a total consideration of € 8 million.

Huawei Co is based in Shenzhen-China and is a leading telecom solutions provider in the fields of telecom network infrastructure, application & software, professional services, and devices. Huawei's products and solutions have been deployed in over 100 countries and have served 45 of the world's top 50 telecom operators. Huawei has revenues of € 16.5 billion with over 100,000 employees.

M4S is based in Leuven-Belgium and is a semiconductor company developing a state-of-the-art, next generation Radio Frequency chipset to be used in 4G devices with an innovative approach to multi standard wireless connectivity in mobile devices.

This acquisition is part of a larger agreement between Huawei Technologies and Option to work on joint research & development projects to stimulate innovation in the telecom industry. Both companies are also exploring the establishment of a joint R&D centre in Belgium, as well as ways of contributing resources to develop new wireless broadband solutions and software.

SynCap, Clairfield's partner in Germany and Belgium, acted as exclusive M&A advisor to Huawei.
